INTERNAL PRESENTATION ONLY

Your Digital Story will definitely be displayed only to fellow students and teaching staff

As long as your Digital Story will be presented only within the confines of your classroom you can rely on Fair Dealing provisions in the Copyright Act. This allows you to use some copyrighted material in your Digital Story (see information on Fair Dealing - http://www.library.uow.edu.au/copyright/OW026672.html#fivefair).

You cannot rely on Fair Dealing if you intend to post your Digital Story to a website, email it to friends, or present it in public (anywhere other than in your classroom, for your classmates and lecturer).

EXTERNAL

Your Digital Story may be displayed outside the classroom (eg Facebook, emailed to friends, public presentation)

Follow these guidelines if you intend to post your Digital Story to a website, email it to friends, or present it in public (anywhere other than in your classroom, for your classmates and lecturer), whether it be immediately or any time in the future.

In this case you cannot rely on Fair Dealing, so you either need to get permission - http://www.library.uow.edu.au/copyright/infopermisssions/index.html - to use other people’s material, or use material that has an associated licence that allows you to do so without seeking permission (eg Creative Commons - http://www.creativecommons.org.au).

If you use free content, such as that found at The Freesound Project - http://www.freesound.org/ you must carefully read and follow any attribution and usage rules. These may vary from item to item.
